The Cambridge Review of International Affairs publishes excellent and innovative scholarship in international relations, law and political economy. The Cambridge Review promotes scholarly debate through its main format of thematic sections of up to four or five papers debating theoretical, empirical and/or methodological questions. Submission of panels, workshops, etc for joint publication is therefore encouraged (all papers strictly individually peer reviewed and evaluated). To promote debate between theory and practice, leading practitioners of international affairs are invited to provide practical insights.

The Cambridge Review of International Affairs is a peer-reviewed journal published four times a year, in March, June, September and December. These four issues constitute one volume.

Notes for Contributors

All submissions should be made via our Manuscript Central site at http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/ccam. Other queries can be sent to the editor at: cricaa@hermes.cam.ac.uk or The Editor, Cambridge Review of International Affairs, Centre of International Studies, First Floor, 17 Mill Lane, Cambridge CB2 1RX, UK.

The Cambridge Review of International Affairs welcomes solicited and unsolicited articles, and book reviews from academics and practitioners of international affairs. Articles should not exceed 9,000 words, including footnotes and references. Book reviews should not exceed 800 words for a review of one book and 1,500 words for a review of two books. The Cambridge Review may occasionally also publish shorter essays of up to 5,000 words from prominent academics and practitioners in international affairs.

Articles and essays must be accompanied by a 150-word abstract of the article or essay. Authors of articles, essays and book reviews must include, separately, a curriculum vitae statement of 70 words (which should include highest academic degree and university from which it was obtained, current affiliation / place of employment and title, previous relevant employment and relevant recent publications). Book reviews should include important bibliographic information as well as substantive analysis and comments (with associative page numbers) on the content of the book(s) under review.

For further details on submission, including the journal’s style guide, please see ‘Instructions for Authors’ at www.cria.org.uk.

It is a condition of publication that authors assign copyright or license the publication rights in their articles, including abstracts, to the Centre of International Studies, University of Cambridge. This enables us to ensure full copyright protection and to disseminate the article, and of course the Journal, to the widest possible readership in print and electronic formats as appropriate. Authors retain many rights under the Taylor & Francis rights policies, which can be found at www.tandfonline.com/authors/journalcopyrightposition. Authors are themselves responsible for obtaining permission to reproduce copyright material from other sources.
